APPARATUS AND METHOD FOR SOCCER TRAINING AND PRACTICE

RECEIVED

Rule 132 Declaration

JUN 2 5 2004

TECHNOLOGY CENTER R3700

The undersigned declarant, a co-inventor/co-applicant in the above identified application states:

- I have reviewed the above application and its parent as filed and amended, including the proposed claims before the Examiner and all record references and PTO actions and state the following regarding the claimed invention of the present application in relation to prior art.
- 2. I now supplement (in Appendix A hereto) the previously-filed commercial success data of our Soccer Edge® training device (by the 14 October 2003 Rule 132 declaration, copy in Appendix B hereto), which is an embodiment of the presently claimed invention, in comparison to commercial embodiments of the Sowards and Ainscough, et al., inventions. We have now sold over 25,000 units and have placed the devices for sale in over 800 stores currently (including The Sports Authority®). This number will be expanding to over 1200 stores (including The Forzani Group of Canada, which is a large Canadian sporting goods retailer comparable to The Sports Authority®, El Corte Ingles in Spain, a major department store, and K-Mart in Australia) by Fall of 2004.
- 3. Our sales of the SoccerEdge Edge® trainer have been greater in the first 6 months of this year than in all of 2003.
- 4. The commercial success can only be attributed to merit of the product as appraised by these sophisticated retail customers. Our company remains without the resources or sales force of typical sporting goods companies, which employ marketing/advertising and the leveraging of other products to gain shelf space.
- 5. My co-inventor and I have had positive feedback from soccer coaches and in the market place as described below and in my previously-filed declaration. Our product (per the claimed invention) has been designated the Official Licensed Bungee Soccer Trainer of the U.S. Soccer Federation, the governing body of organized soccer in the United States.

- 6. I have previously provided information (accompanying the 14 October 2003 declaration, Appendix B hereto) regarding the PenaltymasterTM rebounding soccer trainer. Appendix C hereto contains promotional literature for a further state of the art rebounding soccer trainer, the SoccixTM trainer. The Soccix trainer utilizes two rubber loops clipped directly to the ball and attached to two croquet-style wickets, rather than the single rubber loop, ball net and wicket of the Penaltymaster trainer. Patents are apparently pending for both the Soccix and Penaltymaster designs, both of which are inferior to the claimed combinations of the present invention.
- 7. I have previously provided evidence of the comparative merits of the presently claimed invention in comparison to the Sowards' Kwik Kick Speed BallTM trainer and the Ainscoff trainer. As noted previously, the Ainscoff trainer was offered for sale on TV home shopping but was not a durable offering and can no longer be found for sale. The Kwik Kick Speed BallTM trainer had been selling at The Sports Authority until our Soccer Edge® training device was introduced to the market. The Kwik Kick is no longer for sale at The Sports Authority, while our product has been rolled out to all of their stores.
- 8. I have also been informed by a buyer for Modell's Sporting Goods, Inc., one of our customers, that another sporting goods seller, Brine Sporting Goods, Inc., (Milford, MA) has recently presented that buyer with a "special make-up unit" (SMU) which copied our design. In other words, Brine attempted to sell a "knock off" of our Soccer Edge® training device to Modell's. It is clear to me that Brine recognizes the advantages provided by our inventive soccer training design.
- 9. Yet further evidence of the comparative merits of products is found in the recall announcement from the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission related to a Franklin Sports soccer trainer that employed a straight metal stake or spike to anchor the product, a copy of which is included in Appendix D hereto. The risk of injury presented by the Franklin product, if obvious, would have been anticipated and prevented in the product's design (i.e., Franklin retrieved its straight stakes rather than replace them with spirals.)
- 10. The art as a whole fails to recognize the need for a combination of a combined elastic/inelastic line with a net carrier for the ball and a universally flexible means for strongly securing in a minimally-interfering way a retrieval-type soccer kick practicing device that provides realistic ball motion (i.e., lift and roll) and true 360 range of kicking ability. Each of the applied references fails individually and in the aggregate to do so. I incorporate my discussion of the Ainscough, et al., and Sowards references' failure to teach or suggest the presently claimed invention, made in my previous declaration and responses in the application of 14 October 2003 and 06 June 2002. The Moore reference depicts and describes only a "suitable anchor" consisting of a tent stake, and a ball holder mechanism comprised of four orthogonally arranged pieces of webbing and an elastic band securing them to the ball. The former will not provide the sufficient securing force to accommodate stronger kickers, and the latter will not provide true soccer ball motion, as the presently claimed invention provides.

- 11. The present invention as described and claimed comprises a soccer ball practice apparatus made as a combination of a tether line including an elastic section, a net container/securement for a soccer ball, a ground insertable/removable anchor unit as a spiral with an upper section and a handle which is turned for insertion of the spiral portion to enter the ground and to leave only an upper circular portion exposed, the tether line tied between the anchor means and the net, by a ring that rides on the circular portion of the anchor upper circle portion, a shackle interconnect or the like from the elastic portion of the tether line (and a swivel) to the ring to enable rotation of the tether line about its own axis. The kicked ball returns to the kicker, rolling back without material interference from the apparatus.
- 12. My co-inventor and I are familiar with soccer play and practice and the full range of commercially available training choices on the market, presently or in the past. The presently claimed invention provides a much closer approximation of normal game play than the systems of the cited art, while minimizing the possibility that a user's kick will dislodge the stake from the ground. The present invention allows repetitive kicking in a variety of angles and trajectories from any position around the anchor on the fly. The player can move around to kick the ball, which cannot be done with the Sowards or Ainscough et al. devices. Most importantly, with the present invention a player can kick the ball straight ahead in front of herself and see if the ball goes in the direction intended. One troublesome skill for young players to learn is "lifting" the ball upward when they kick it. This is impossible with the Sowards device. The Ainscough et al. device does not allow a 360° range of kick up and over the device, as its support pipe and swiveling arm only allow 360 degree rotation about the axis of the pole; therefore, the player will not know if the ball would have traveled in the direction intended with the rise in trajectory desired, which defeats the purpose of practice kicking. The Moore device does not show a practice device that has a strong ground connection. With the Moore device, a kicker may unintentionally pull the tent stake from the ground with her kick (a potentially hazardous event as evidenced by the CPSC recall noted in paragraph 9), the partial webbing/elastic band ball holding mechanism will not provide true ball motion, and its additional weight will further inhibit the ability to get "lift" under the ball.
- 13. I have tested and observed, that using the present invention with an elastic cord a player can effect a great variety of fast returns of different angles that are anything but "fixed." The present invention also provides truer ball motion, absolutely necessary for young players developing their kicking skills.

I hereby declare that all statements made herein of my own knowledge are true and that all statements made on information and belief are believed to be true; and further that these statements were made with the knowledge that willful false statements and the like so made are punishable by fine or imprisonment or both under Section 1001 of Title 18 of the United State Code and that such willful false statements may jeopardize the validity of the application or any patent issued thereon.

Respectfully submitted,

Dated: June 15, 2004

APPARATUS AND METHOD FOR SOCCER TRAINING AND PRACTICE

RULE 132 DECLARATION

The undersigned declarant, a co-inventor/co-applicant in the above identified application states:

- I have reviewed the above application and its parent as filed and amended including the proposed claims before the Examiner and all record references and PTO actions and state the following regarding the invention of the present application in relation to prior art.
- 2. The present invention as described and claimed comprises a soccer ball practice apparatus made as a combination of a tether line including an elastic section, a net container/securement for a soccer ball, a ground insertable/removable anchor unit as a spiral with an upper section and a handle which is turned for insertion of the spiral portion to enter the ground and to leave only an upper circular portion exposed, the tether line tied between the anchor means and the net, by a ring that rides on the circular portion of the anchor upper circle portion, a shackle interconnect or the like from the elastic portion of the tether line (and a swivel) to the ring to enable rotation of the tether line about its own axis. The kicked ball returns to the kicker, rolling back without material interference from the apparatus.

- 3. My co-inventor and I are familiar with soccer play and practice and the full range of commercially available training choices on the market, presently or in the past. The presently recited invention provides a much closer approximation of normal game play than the systems of the cited art, while minimizing the possibility that a user's kick will dislodge the soccer ball from of training equipment. The present invention allows repetitive kicking in a variety of angles and trajectories from any position around the anchor on the fly. The player can move around to kick the ball, which cannot be done with the Sowards or Ainscough et al. devices. Most importantly, with the present invention a player can kick the ball straight ahead in front of herself and see if the ball goes in the direction intended. One troublesome skill for young players to learn is "lifting" the ball upward when they kick it. This is impossible with the Sowards device. With the Ainscough et al. device, the player cannot see where the ball travels and the swiveling arm constrains the ball's rising, which is the opposite of what the young player wants to practice. With the Moore device, a kicker may unintentionally pull the tent stake from the ground with her kick, the partial webbing/elastic band ball holding mechanism will not provide true ball motion, and its additional weight will further inhibit the ability to get "lift" under the ball.
- 4. My co-inventor and I have had positive feedback from soccer coaches and in the market place as described below and in my previously-filed declaration. We are the Official Licensed Bungee Soccer Trainer of the U.S. Soccer Federation, the governing body of organized soccer in the United States.
- 5. We have previously provided information regarding the commercial success of our Soccer Edge® device in comparison to commercial embodiments of the Sowards and Ainscough, et al., inventions. Supplementing the previously-filed commercial success data is, appearing as Appendix A hereto, a Sales Analysis for the Soccer

Christopher Evans, et al.

Edge® device, reflecting over 10,000 units sold to eight customers as of September 2003. This list includes re-orders from customers, one of which has re-ordered units from us for three years. This further evidences the distinct contribution the described and presently claimed invention makes to the art.

- 6. The commercial success can only be attributed to merit of the product as apprised by these sophisticated retail customers. Our company cannot afford significant marketing/advertising. We have no sales employees. We have no leverage of other products to use to gain shelf space. The sales that occurred at the retail level were without any prompting of end users by us. We have had only 20 returns and no complaints at the end user level. (These situations if occurring would be likely come to our attention via the retail chains).
- Provided as Appendix B hereto are copies of pages of the Sept.-Oct. 2003

 EurosportTM soccer equipment catalog reflecting currently marketed soccer kick practicing equipment. One of the non-rebounder devices shown is the PenaltymasterTM. The Directions for Use of the PenaltymasterTM (provided as Appendix C hereto) reflects the recognition on the behalf of its developers that straight pegs may be dislodged from the ground upon a kick. This also further evidences the fact that the described and presently claimed invention provides an unobvious solution (i.e., the use of a spiraled tie down stake) to a problem still not recognized by some soccer trainer equipment artisans.
- 8. The art as a whole fails to recognize the need for strongly securing in a minimally-interfering way a retrieval-type soccer kick practicing device that provides realistic ball motion (i.e., lift and roll) and true 360° range of kicking ability. Each of the applied references fails individually and in the aggregate to do so. I incorporate my discussion of the Ainscough, et al., and Sowards references' failure to teach or suggest the presently claimed invention, made in my previous declaration and responses. The Moore reference depicts and describes only a "suitable anchor" consisting of a tent stake, and a ball holder mechanism comprised of four orthogonally arranged pieces of webbing and an elastic hand securing them to the ball. The former will not provide the sufficient securing furce to accommodate stronger kickers, and the latter will not provide true soccer ball motion, as the presently claimed invention provides.

9. I have tested and observed, that using the present invention with an elastic cord a player can effect a great variety of fast returns of different angles that are mything but "fixed." The present invention also provides truer ball monon, absolutely necessary for young players developing their kicking skills.

I hereby declars that all statements made herein of my own knowledge are true and that all statements made on information and belief are believed to be true; and further that these statements were made with the knowledge that willful false statements and the like so made are punishable by fine or imprisonment or both under Section 1001 of Title 18 of the United State Code and that such willful false statements may jeopardize the validity of the application or any patent issued thereon.

Respectfully submitted,

Franklin Sports Recalls Baseball, Soccer Training Sets

WASHINGTON — Baseball and Soccer Trainer products which use either a metal stake or a metal spike to anchor the product to the ground are being voluntarily recalled by Franklin Sports Industries, Inc. of Stoughton, Mass., because they may pose a risk of injury if improperly used. The firm has had two reports of children being struck by the stake during unusual use.

In voluntary cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, Franklin Sports is recalling training products described as Model #1595 - Batting Tee with Return Ball Trainer; Model #1597 - Return Ball Trainer; and Model #1598 Complete Teeball Set.

Sold under the "Mike Schmidt" brand name, each baseball training product consisted, in part, of a three-inch rubber baseball labeled: "FRANKLIN POWER HIT RETURN BALL 1358 TAIWAN." The baseball is connected to an elastic string and was accompanied by an 8 1/2 inch metal ground stake.

Also being recalled is Model #1758 - Return Kick Soccer Skill Trainer. This set, which was sold without a soccer stall, included a soccer ball net connected to an elastic string accompanied by a 10 1/2 inch metal ground spike.

Consumers who have these items are asked to stop using them immediately and return only the stake/cord/ball or spike directly to: Stake Recall, Franklin Sports Industries, Inc., 17 Campanelli Parkway, Stoughton, Mass. 02072. For additional information, consumers may call Franklin Sports toll-free at 1-800-225-8647; Massachusetts residents may call 1-817-344-1111.
